LUMBER BUSINESS FACES GREAT CRISIS

Startling Decrease in Timber Supply in 30 Years.

RECKLESS TREE CUTTING

Saving American Forests From Total Destruction.

Never before has the question of the preservation of the forests of America been of such interest as at the present greatest industry of the United States, is confronted with a growing scarcity of timber. Scientists maintain that the destruction of vast forest tracts is in large part responsible for the terrible beat waves that come with greater frequency than in years gone by. Recent ares, destroying millions of feet of timber, call for more active and judicious zare of the forests.

R. L. McCormick, president of the Mis-Bissippi Valley Lumbermen's Association, advocates the use of practical forestry, as outlined by the United States Forestry Bureau, and more conservative lumbering as the only means by which the changed conditions can be met.

"The question of whether conservative second crop upon lumbered lands is sufficient to make it a profitable enterprise to foster and protect it, and in many cases the time has already come when practical forestry is a good business investment for lumbermen

Suggestions to Be Heeded.

"We have received a good deal of abuse for what has been termed our vandalism-abuse which was unreasonable, and which was not accompanied by pertinent suggestions for reform; but now the Bureau of Forestry puts the question of conservative lumbering in a way which makes it worth the attention of lumbermen. "The Bureau of Foresty does not deal with forestry problems merely in a general way. It gives each timber tract upon which its assistance is requested a careful study, and draws up its plans for management with due regard for the purpose and point of view of the lumberman. The advice given by the forestry bureau is, in a word, the best business policy for the management of timber tracts, and is based on a thorough expert examination.

Growing Scarcity of Timber.

"Statistics show," said Mr. McCormick that the lumber business is more and more confronted with a growing scarcity of available timber. And though Amerof any other country in enterprise, ingenuity, and skill in methods and machinery, we are obliged to charge more lies not in the cost of manufacture, but the dwindling supply of the timber

"Certain kinds of valuable timber trees of the United States are rapidly failing; others have entirely vanished as a factor in the lumber market. Fo example, ten years ago the use of balsum in the manufacture of paper pulp of the Western hemlock, until recently prices: discredited as a timber tree. The red fir of the Northwest and the Southern pines are rapidly invading markets formerly controlled altogether by the white pine of the north central States, while species of peculiar value, such as black walnut and black cherry, have practically vanished from the market.

Forests of Michigan.

"As an example of the diminution of the stand of merchantable timber in some of the great lumber regions, the forests of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota afford a good picture. These forests originally contained about 350,-000,000,000 feet of timber. Today a careful estimate shows but 35,000,000,000 feet or but one-tenth of the original stand. This change has taken place in the last thirty years. The vast discrepancy is due to the lumbering, with the exception, perhaps, of about 60,000,000,000 loss due to Bre. In 1892 the lumbering in this region reached the high water mark of $ 500,000,000 feet. Since then the anpual cut has steadily decreased."

In the crop outlook there is nothing discouraging except backwardness. In the case of corn this is of consequence, because it increases the danger from frost, and the prolonged absence of high temperature is unfavorable to corn. Six or eight weeks of warm weather, however, would work great changes in this crop. For wheat we are practically sure of a plentiful harvest, together.

After discounting unfavorable news to such a liberal extent it is possible to look for a fair recovery, and should crop and money conditions prove favorable a more active and stronger market should follow later on.
